

The great learners are not only to find what they like,
but to like what they find.

It is impossible for us to learn what we think we have already known.