Poverty is a problem faced in all provinces in Indonesia, including the province of Lampung. Poverty is a phenomenon that is both complex and multidimensional. In addressing poverty the government as a policy makers make efforts by creating policies for the poors, one of the Conditional Cash Transfer (CCT). CCT applied in Lampung Province since 2009, one of the district covered by the CCT is East Lampung Regency.

This study aims to Obtain an overview of implementation of CCT in poverty alleviation in East Lampung Regency. In the implementation of CCT East Lampung district there are obstacles, i.e less valid beneficiary data, lack of fulfillment infrastructure. In uncovering this problem, researchers used a model of implementation developed by Van Meter and Van Horn and some other supporting theories. This research is a descriptive study with a qualitative approach.

The conclusion from this study are the implementation of CCT In Poverty Reduction in East Lampung district does not operate effectively. As there are beneficiaries which are not in accordance with these terms and conditions, they still lack the quality of human resources and unmet infrastructure, implementation of activities CCT such coordination meetings, distribution of aid, data validation beneficiaries, not within their predetermined schedule or delayed. In order to achieve its intended purpose, it needs better cooperation, improve the quality of human resources and also need participation and scrutiny from all elements.
