The COVID-19 pandemic has hit Indonesia and has had a significant impact on the economic sector, so it takes hard work from all elements, including the Regional House of Representatives to carry out supervision. The city of Bandar Lampung is one of the areas where one of the largest revenues comes from the tax and levy sector, so in this situation, the local revenue sector has greatly decreased because many economic activities were limited during the COVID-19 pandemic. In a situation like this, the Bandar Lampung City Regional House of Representatives should be present as a legislative body carrying out its supervisory function and the right of initiative to assist the executive in finding solutions to economic problems due to the impact of the COVID-19 pandemic. The purpose of this study was to determine the performance of the Bandar Lampung City Regional House of Representatives in supervising the management of local revenue (PAD) during the COVID-19 pandemic. This study uses a descriptive type of research with a qualitative approach. Data collection techniques in this study through interviews. The results of this study are based on the indicators in this study, namely discipline, responsibility, initiative, and effectiveness, which are good enough so that the performance of the Bandar Lampung City Regional House of Representatives in supervising the management of local revenue (PAD) during the COVID-19 pandemic is quite maximal.
