The valid questionnaire was then distributed to 75 respondents who were Shamiya consumers. The collected data were tested using instrument testing techniques, classical assumption tests, and multiple linear regression analysis tests. The results of multiple linear regression analysis showed that simultaneous assays (F) and partial tests (T) significantly influenced the dependent variable (Y). The results of the R Square value determination test stated that product quality and halal certification simultaneously had an influence on buying interest by 15% and the remaining 85% influence was explained from other variables outside of the research conducted.
