The Omnibus Law on the Job Creation Law led to the reinstatement of the low wage system and reduced severance rates, lifelong contract employees and lifelong outsourcing. Based on the problems above, workers in Lampung Province carried out a movement against. The Omnibus Law on the Job Creation Law because it cannot guarantee certainty that their quality of life will get better. The new social movement of workers in rejecting the Omnibus Law on the Job Creation Law in Lampung Province pays more attention to economic and political factors, therefore this research uses the Resource Mobilization Theory (RMT) theory. This research uses a descriptive research type with a qualitative approach. Data collection techniques in this study included observation, interviews with informants from the Head of FSPMI and Head of SBTL in Lampung Province and documentation. Based on the results of this study, it shows that: FSPMI and SBTL do not fulfill the 5 (five) determinant factors of Resource Mobilization Theory. The first factor is that the social movement organizations FSPMI and SBTL have the same ideology, namely Pancasila, but have different perspectives regarding the movement against the Omnibus Law on the Job Creation Law. The second factor, the leaders and leadership of the FSPMI and SBTL have the same way of leading labor organizations to go directly to the field and provide education to their members so as to inspire members to act. The third factor, FSPMI has complete and permanent resources while SBTL is temporary. The fourth factor, FSPMI's network and participation is open with other groups to join the movement, while the SBTL does not get involved in the labor movement rejecting the Omnibus Law on the Job Creation Law because it has different views from the goals and targets of the movement. The fifth factor, FSPMI conducted open dialogue discussions regarding the Omnibus Law on the Job Creation Law, but it has not yet reached all of the community. Based on two analytical models in the resource mobilization theory approach. First, The Professional organizer models FSPMI and SBTL have not been successful in organizational dynamics, leadership and resource management. Second, The Political Process Model has not been successful because it was caused by the state being too strong and repressive towards the Movement against the Omnibus Law on the Job Creation Law.
