This research aims to describe the analysis of the impact of bullying behavior at school on the social development of teenagers at SMP Negeri 6 Natar. This research uses qualitative research methods. In this research, the informant chosen must be someone who understands the culture and situation that you want to study in order to provide information to the researcher. The informants in this research were students who were victims of bullying, guidance and counseling teachers, Civics teachers and students' homeroom teachers. The results of this research show that bullying behavior has an impact on social development which is characterized by decreased or reduced social interaction with peers, preferring to stay at home, feeling less confident and feeling afraid and anxious when going to school. This impact arises because bullying behavior continues to carry out its actions, namely by mocking and insulting body shape and skin color as well as physical bullying, therefore the victim feels uncomfortable when in a social environment, which has a negative impact on his social development.
