The urgency of this study lies in the fact that many lower grade elementary students still experience difficulties in early reading. This condition demands the active role of teachers in overcoming such obstacles through appropriate learning strategies. The purpose of this research was describe the teachers' roles as a guide, facilitator, and evaluator in addressing students' early reading difficulties. This study employed a qualitative approach with a case study design. Data were collected through interviews, observations, and documentation. The research subjects included lower grade teachers, the school principal, parents, and students. The findings reveal that: (1) as a guide, teachers provide individual and small-group assistance; (2) as a facilitator, teachers prepared simple learning media, select books according to students' abilities, and take initiatives to overcome the school's limited facilities; and (3) as an evaluator, teachers conduct regular assessments and provided follow-up actions through additional guidance and parental involvement.
